PREFACE

THE purpose of these pictures is to preserve a record of voluntary service rendered, during forty-two months of war, by the Red Cross to sick and wounded sailors and soldiers in the East of Scotland, in the country between the Tay and the Tweed. If, in this brief preface, mention is not made, with one exception, of any individual, it is because the whole effort has been a collective one, the cumulative effect of which has had a sustaining power sufficient to surmount the difficulties inherent in any voluntary organisation.

In the vanguard of the Red Cross army stand the old Voluntary Aid Detachments. They, the pioneers, set a patriotic example in the years before 1914, learning, training, making themselves all the time, in preparation for the coming need. When the time came they were ready, and the Red Cross badge they now wear, with the inscription 'For Service,' is their proud distinction. Others followed their lead, on the outbreak of war, and have joined in nobly bearing the burden and heat of the day. Many a one now carries the honoured three stripes upon her sleeve. The V.A.D. members have shrunk from no duties imposed upon them. One and all heard and responded to the summons.

'Hadst thou stayed, I must have fled!'
That is what the Vision said.

For the purpose of establishing Auxiliary Hospitals, houses of every size and in all situations were tendered by their owners, not grudgingly or of necessity, but by cheerful givers. Thanks are due to the public-spirited intentions of all. It was a labour of love to prepare those chosen, and many a wounded man now looks back to the time he spent in what he came to regard as his home. Many a man has found soothing for his nerves in the quiet and beauty of his surroundings. Doctors, surgeons, nurses, sisters, have been assiduous in bestowing all their professional knowledge and skill upon those who have been committed to their care.

From the quay-side and from the railway platform, from hospital ship and from ambulance train, sick and wounded, weary with travel, have been carried in unending procession by the incomparable Mens' Voluntary Aid Detachment, the strong man handling as tenderly as a woman those under his charge. Ranged alongside, waiting the arrival, have stood the motor ambulances under the ever watchful eyes of those responsible for the Red Cross rolling stock. The work has been arduous and constant, done by those with other heavy demands upon their time, who yet have always been on the alert for the expected call. On occasion it has been a question not of how many nights in the week the members of the Detachment were out of bed, but of how many nights they were in bed.

Ceaselessly, since August 1914, the needles have been plied by thousands of women, and the cry has all along been for flannel and wool—more wool and more flannel, to make the comforts which old and young anxiously cut and stitch and knit, and then hold out with both hands. Day in and day out these comforts and dressings and bandages have been received and dispatched to hospitals at home and abroad, packed by never-tiring workers in the ball-room of bygone days. Those who have nothing else to give, give the devotion of their eyes and fingers: those who are giving—those who have given—everything, they know, in their toil, what it means to bring the body into harmony with the spirit of sacrifice.

For some the work is intermittent, for many it is continuous, and for none more constant than for those charged with the daily office routine. Without them the work would have been impossible. To plan and arrange, to co-ordinate and distribute, to prepare returns and check accounts, all this has meant a strain upon devoted officials which only the fire of enthusiasm has enabled them to support. The brunt has been borne by Colonel David Wallace, C.M.G., C.B.E., F.R.C.S., the Commissioner for the Eastern District and the Secretary of the Edinburgh Red Cross Committee, who has rallied the forces again and again. To him it is right to ascribe in public the credit of the measure of success attained in the district by those enlisted under the Red Cross flag.

If money is mentioned last, it is not because the work could have been done without it. The pennies of the poor, and the pounds of the rich, have all been needed to enable the burden of pain to be eased. In order to carry on it was essential to have the loyal support of all those who realise that in time of war there is much care and attention that cannot be bestowed by the State on her fighting men—there are comforts and luxuries that can only be provided by the individual. This is the true field for Red Cross effort. The work goes on, and will go on to the end, with the support of those who are determined that all due provision shall be made by us for those who have given so much for us. When will that end be? There is but one reply—'How much farther have we to go to get up this hill, Sandy?' 'Well, sir, just to the top.' The answer, given years ago by a Highland ghillie, may well serve for our watchword to-day—We will go on—'Just to the top.'

WORK OF THE TRANSPORT

THE Transport Sub-Committee appointed in August 1914 consisted of Sir Mitchell Mitchell-Thomson, Bart., Convener, Mr. Harry George Younger, Bailie Mackenzie, and Mr. D. P. Maclagan. Later on Mr. Andrew Melvin and Dr. Stewart Ross, the County Director, were added to it. Later Mr. Alexander Allan became Assistant Transport Officer.

The plant at the commencement consisted of one open touring car lent to the Edinburgh Committee. The plant has gradually grown until it now consists of 24 ambulances, 7 landaulettes, 1 open car, 1 omnibus, 1 covered waggonette, and 2 lorries. There are 14 regular and 9 auxiliary drivers, and 1 washer employed.

The ambulances can carry 88 cots or 87 stretchers, or 181 sitting at one lift.

For the first two years of the war the Edinburgh Committee was largely dependent on voluntary help from private motor owners and firms owning hire cars in Edinburgh, and this was most willingly given ; private cars being sent by many people regularly every day, and but for them the work could not have been carried on. As the plant increased and the petrol restrictions became more severe, outside help decreased, and practically the whole work is now done by the Committee's own plant.

The Edinburgh Committee does the whole of the transport of sick and wounded for the Military in the Edinburgh district, and it also assists the Navy when the Navy's plant is not sufficient for the purpose. The work consists of evacuating hospital trains to the various first-line hospitals, evacuating hospital ships to hospital trains; transferring convalescents from first-line hospitals to convalescent hospitals; meeting transfers from various first-line hospitals in England to Edinburgh in the case of men requiring special treatment, and generally transporting all military and naval cases not fit to walk. The monthly returns show an average of over 3000 cases carried per month, and there is also a considerable carriage of hospital stores. A table of the total patients and hospital stores carried and mileage run is appended :—

Digitized by Google

Cases carried :—

Naval cases	18,133
Army ambulance trains and military camps	69,823
Convalescents	25,740
Hospital supplies carried . . .	44,863
Total miles run	633,247
